THE NEWEST PARTS AND PRODUCTS FROM THE 2020 SEMA360

»» Compiled by SEMA News Editors

In the first two decades of the 21st century, the automotive sphere has become increasingly digital and cloud-based in its use of technology, and that change has been likewise reflected in the tools and equipment aftermarket. The very definition of a “tool” has expanded beyond the basic impact wrench and scissor lift to include laptops, software and sensor-recalibration equipment. Regardless of type, though, having the proper tools and equipment at hand is crucial for enthusiast builders and modifiers to bring their dreams to fruition.

As a market segment, tool and equipment manufacturers are substantial players, comprising hundreds of companies within a global industry that’s forecast to rise to nearly $10 billion in sales by 2028, according to a 2021 survey published by Data Bridge Market Research.

What follows here are the newest tools and equipment products that were featured in the online New Products Showcase at last year’s SEMA360.

AccuVision-3D AccuVision-3D

Quickest 3D measuring system. No lasers, no targets, no adapters and no magnets. Measuring unit is made as a firm metallic beam with two cameras mounted in it. The beam consists of two parts: outer (for protection) and inner (precise beam supporting cameras). Communication with the computer is made by optical commands, without any wires or Wi-Fi. Probes can be changed during measurement.

"At the moment, Australia is massive on four-wheel-drive aftermarket components, and now, with international travel restrictions, the caravan and travel industry has gone pedal to the metal. I'm hoping that the lack of new cars might have given a boost to the local family-owned mechanic's garage workshop, with older cars needing to run longer, which is a great thing before the all-electric era arrives. Obviously, online shopping has also become a more well-accepted tool in the purchase process to our shopping behaviors, especially here in Australia."

"We really didn't know what was going to happen with COVID. Usually, a reduction of miles driven and a reduction of vehicles being serviced means a reduction in tool sales, so we thought business would be down significantly. But with everyone staying home, we actually saw a pretty big demand as a lot of people needed more tools and toolboxes for projects they were doing around the house. Overall, we were surprised to see how strong sales were in 2020, and looking ahead, the biggest issue now is supply. The lack of raw materials, as well as lockdowns in Asia, has led to a pretty significant reduction in fulfillment, and that's our biggest concern now. But demand continues to be strong."

Wallmek Tools Brake Rotor Press

Brake rotor puller, bearing and time saver. Rusted and stuck brake discs/rotors are an all-too-common problem on many car models. Heavy hammering is frequently used to get the disc/rotor off the hub. That is devastating for the wheel bearing and other sensitive parts in the wheel suspension, and airbags have been triggered and gone off.
